NEWS FROM THE

Heat Related Illnesses

By Jayda Edgar, DNP, APRN, FNP-C

Did you know that extreme heat is responsible for the most weather-related deaths? Extreme heat is defined as high heat and humidity with temperatures over 90 degrees for at least 2-3 days – well, we're there! Of course, we all know it is important to stay hydrated and stay indoors, but there are other things you can do to prevent heat-related illnesses.

First off, do not rely on fans as your primary cooling device. They create a false sense of comfort without reducing your body temperature. Utilizing weather strips and keeping your shades closed can also help keep your indoors cool. If you do not have an AC in your house, you can utilize public spaces such as the library to stay cool.

It is essential to drink water during the day, even when you don't feel thirsty. Always keep a water bottle filled nearby for easy access. Typically, you should drink half your body weight in ounces of water, however for hot days such as these, you need to drink even more.

Be sure to check on the elderly and the young kids and babies, they are most vulnerable to extreme heat.

Attached is a flyer to identify the signs and symptoms associated with heat-related illnesses. As always, if you or someone you know is experiencing any of these symptoms, go to the nearest Emergency Department.
