NEWS FROM THE HANOVER HOSPITAL

Osteoarthritis

By Jayda Edgar, DNP, APRN, FNP-C

In the United States, almost 25% of all adults have arthritis. Osteoarthritis (OA) is the most common form of arthritis. It is known as degenerative joint disease as it is caused by damage to the joint cartilage between bones. It is often confused with rheumatoid arthritis which is an autoimmune disorder that attacks the joints but can affect other body parts such as the heart, lungs, eyes and skin.

The most common symptoms of osteoarthritis are joint pain and stiffness in multiple joints especially the hands, knees, and hips. The pain with OA is often provoked by joint use and relieved with rest. There are many contributing risk factors including increasing age, joint injury or overuse, female gender and being overweight.

Unfortunately, there is no cure for osteoarthritis, however there are many different treatment options. If you are concerned about osteoarthritis, speak to your provider about your symptoms and how to prevent further joint destruction.
